Test 10: Read the text and answer the questions. (10 marks)

Amara had always lived in a small village near the mountains. Life there was quiet and simple. People knew each other, and most of them worked as farmers or shopkeepers. Amara's family owned a small tea shop, where she helped her parents every day after school. When Amara finished school, she decided to move to the city to attend a university. It was her first time away from home. The city was noisy, crowded, and fast-paced. At first, she found it was difficult to adjust. She missed her family, the fresh air, and the peaceful life she had known for so long.

However, Amara slowly started to enjoy the city life. She made new friends, joined a study group, and explored new places. She even found a part-time job at a bookstore near her university. Although life in the city was very different, Amara began to appreciate the freedom and opportunities it offered. Now, whenever she visits her village, she shares her experiences with her family and friends. She still loves the village, but she also feels proud of how much she has grown.
